THE FIRST SPORTS COUPE TO HAVE AN AUTOMATIC INSTALLED WITHOUT HAVING ITS SPIRIT DISMANTLED.

As a rule, driving a sports coupe that has gone from manual to automatic is somewhat akin to reading the Gettysburg Address in Russian.

It simply loses something in the translation.

Performance cars become listless. Nimble handlers become lethargic. In short, sports coupes become spiritless.

INTRODUCING THE $26,065*
BMW 318is AUTOMATIC.

Just because you're not shifting through the gears on this sports coupe doesn't mean you'll be hopelessly sedated by it.

Tap the accelerator and the lusty cry of "one of the smoothest fours on the road" (Car and Driver) sends you off into the distant scenery.

Near-telepathic steering and one of the most communicative suspension systems on earth allow you to slice through corners with a surgeon's precision.

And because we recognize the thrill of driving is as much about decelerating as accelerating, the 318is's brakes are sure-footed and predictable. So much so, they feel as though they could stop a car twice its size.

A feeling made all the more comforting by the knowledge that our energy-absorbing crush tubes, strategically reinforced safety cage and driver's-side airbag are there should you ever need them.

IT INHALES THE ROAD. NOT YOUR BUDGET.

After test driving the BMW 318is, an editor at Automobile Magazine wrote that "this car is not merely a trade-in for a future BMW fantasy."†

True, the 318is is an entry-level BMW. But it has everything from the beguiling skin to the charismatic soul of our 325i – the car that made almost every car magazine's top-ten list over the past year.

And, like all its automotive brethren, it's covered by a 4-year/50,000-mile bumper-to-bumper warranty and a nationwide emergency Roadside Assistance program.†

So call 800-334-4BMW for the BMW dealer nearest you. And schedule a test drive of the BMW 318is.

The sports coupe that proves there's a difference between being equipped with an automatic and being limited by one.

1993 YEARBOOK

Ten. Count 'em.

Hard as it may be to believe, pitching ace Roger Clemens rounds out his first decade of major league play in 1993. And for all 10 seasons, he's worn a Boston Red Sox uniform.

In the feature story "Perfect 10," beginning on page 52, the occasion is celebrated with profiles of the 10 all-time greatest Red Sox starting pitchers—with special emphasis on Clemens' career.

This 1993 season also marks the 75th anniversary of the 1918 World Champion Boston Red Sox. You can learn something about the team and the times in the "Retro 1918" anecdotes on the 1993 Red Sox player pages, beginning on page 11.

Enjoy the Yearbook and the 1993 season.

It consists of a precision lifter in front of the blade that notches into the hair and raises it up. After the blade cuts the lifted hair, the hair shaft can actually drop back below skin level.

HAYWOOD SULLIVAN

GENERAL PARTNER

Haywood Sullivan is a Boston baseball success story — a reserve catcher who rose from the dugout to team ownership. A top pro prospect in both football and baseball, Sullivan signed with the Red Sox on June 15, 1952. The Sox outbid the New York Yankees, among other teams, for Sullivan's services. The 6-4, 210-pounder, plagued by chronic back problems, played in only 60 games over parts of four seasons for the Sox before being dealt to the Kansas City A's, where he appeared in 252 games from 1961-63 before retiring to manage in the minors. Two seasons later, in 1965, he was back to manage the A's, leaving at year's end to rejoin the Red Sox as vice president in charge of player personnel. Within a year, on the heels of eight sub-.500 seasons, the Red Sox became contenders. And so they have remained under Sullivan's leadership.

Sullivan is a member of Major League Baseball's Budget and Audit Committee, Umpire Development and Baseball's Restructuring Committee and Commissioner Search Committee. He was elected in 1988 to a four-year term on the Major League Executive Council and remains in an ex officio position, and is a trustee of the Jimmy Fund.

LOU GORMAN

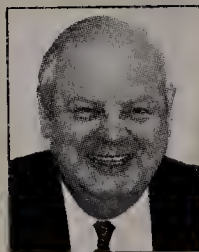

GENERAL MANAGER

Lou Gorman is running the Sox' baseball operations for the 10th year. He handles all matters relating to the operation of the major league club on the field, and holds the overall responsibility for the procurement and development of talent.

Coming to Boston was a return to his roots for Gorman, who grew up in Providence, Rhode Island. Lou graduated from LaSalle Academy in Providence and Stonehill College in North Easton, Massachusetts.

He began his major league career as the assistant farm and scouting director for the Baltimore Orioles, after having served in the minors as general manager at Lakeland, in the Florida State League and Kinston, NC, in the Carolina League. In 1985, he was inducted into the Kinston Sports Hall of Fame.

Lou serves on the Major League Amateur Study Committee, the Major League College and High School Committee, and is a member of the board of directors of the Major League Scouting Bureau. He is also on the board of visitors of Massachusetts Maritime Academy, and the Science/Management Council at Bridgewater State College.

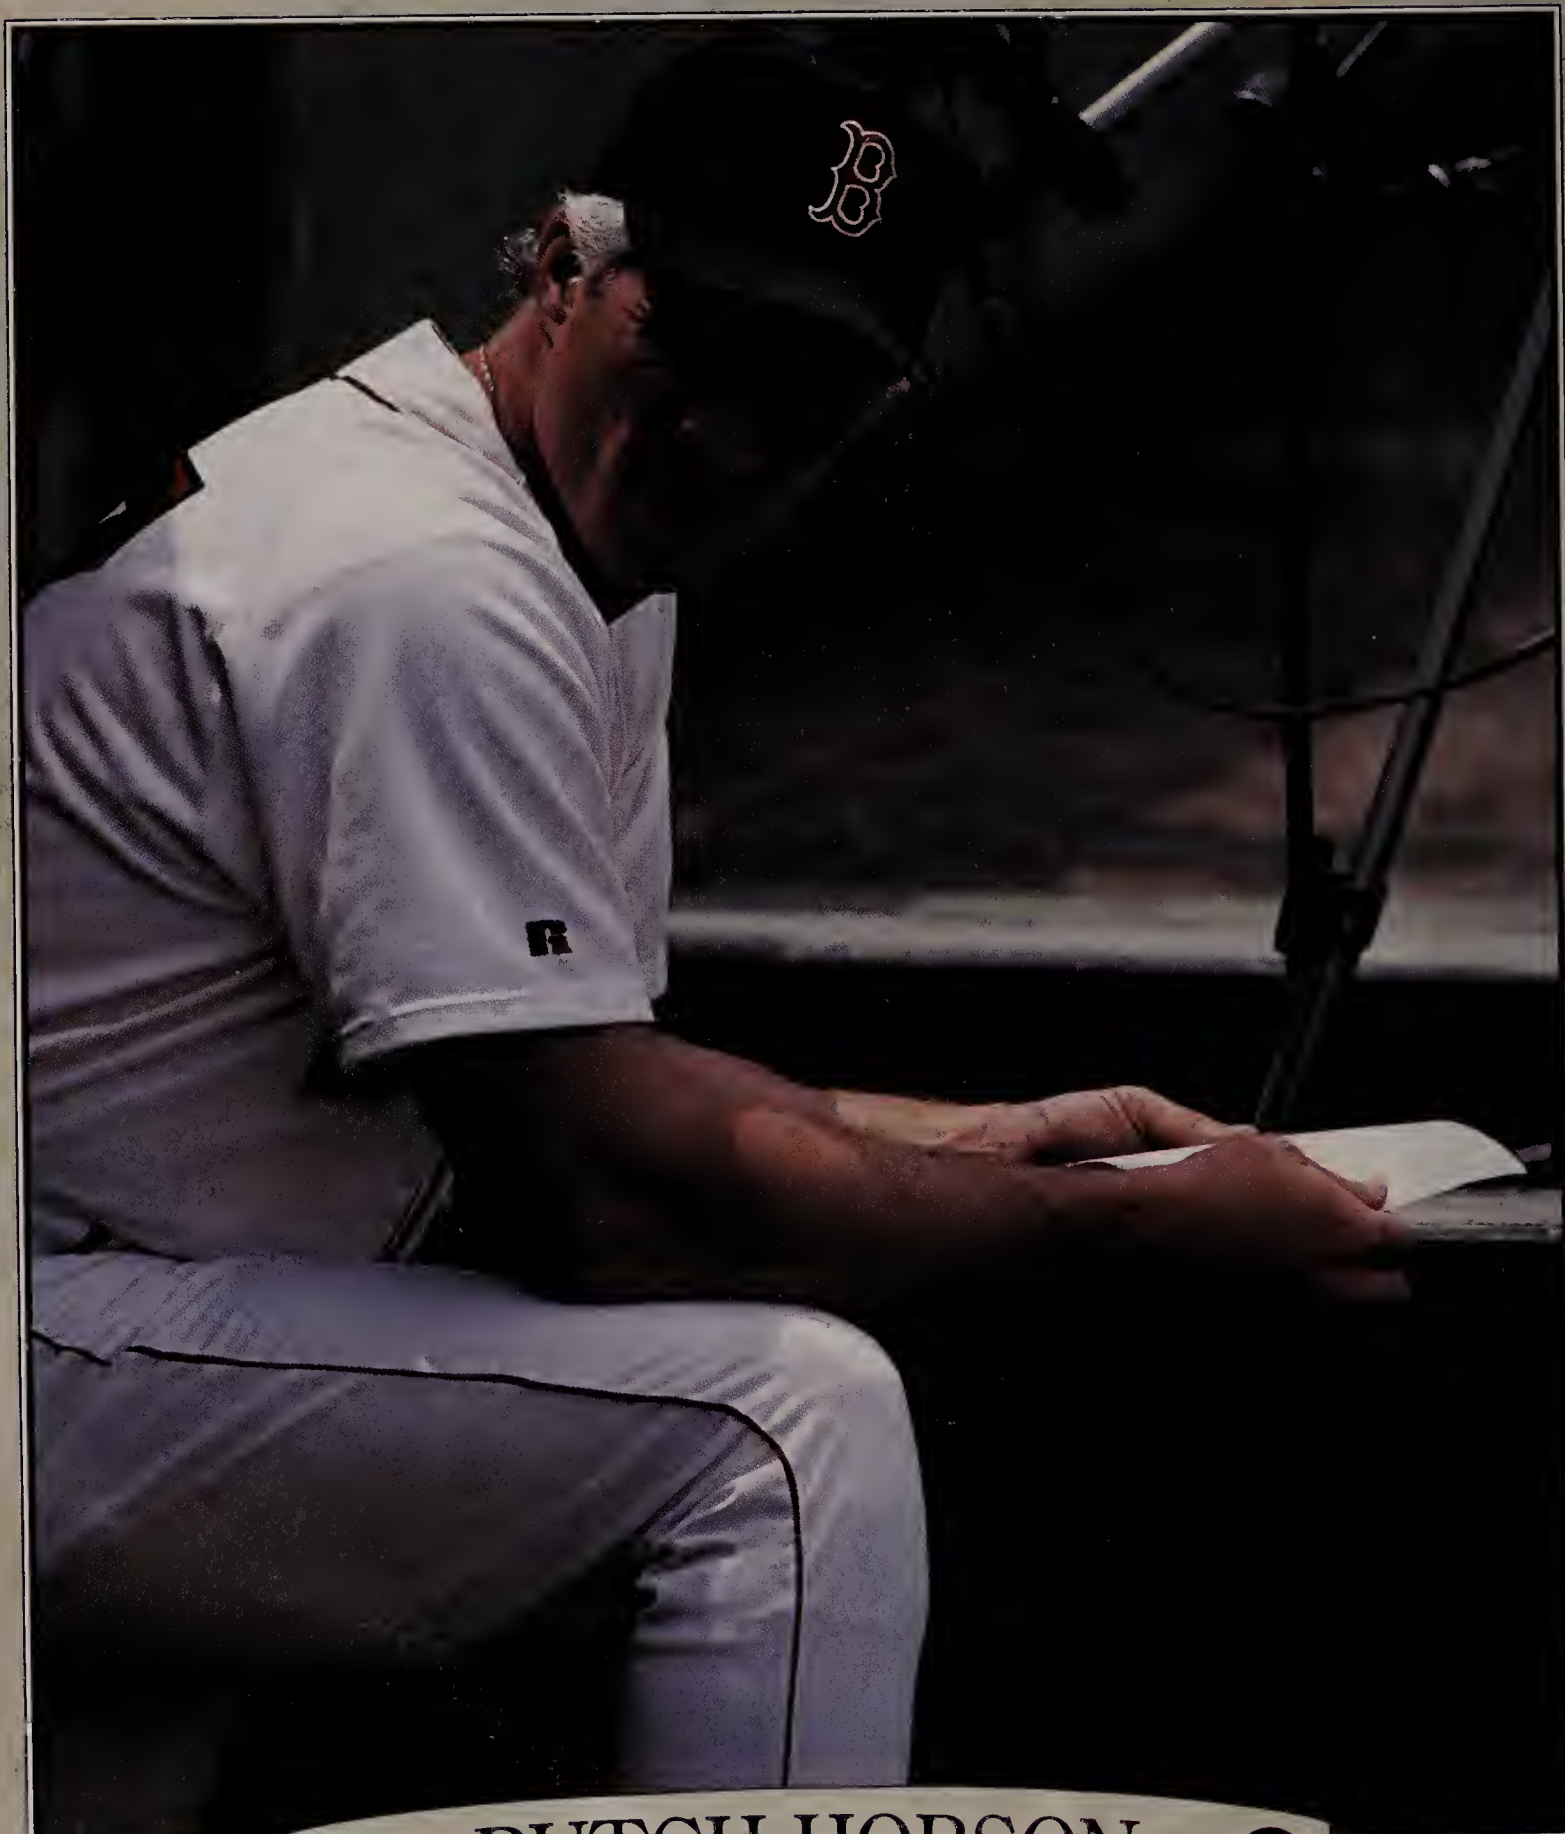

Spring is in the air. People are doing wild and crazy things. And there's only one cure: you've got to get some energy in your life. You've got to rock 'n roll.

So, turn up the music, get some get up and go, put some pep in your step. Go nuts. Literally. Try the great taste of Planters Nuts.

You'll be rockin' and rollin' in no time.

MANAGER

BUTCH HOBSON

17

The former Red Sox third baseman enters his second year as the club's manager. Hobson, the Sox' eighth pick in the 1973 June draft, played six of his eight major league seasons in Boston, from 1975-1980. Butch still holds the club's single-season records for third basemen for home runs (30) and RBI (112) marks he set in 1977.

RICK BURLESON THIRD BASE COACH

One of the Sox' most popular players in the 1970s, Rooster returns to coach third. In 1992 Burleson acted as the club's hitting instructor, and from mid-July also served as third base coach.

MIKE EASLER HITTING INSTRUCTOR

The Hit Man is back after playing in Boston from 1984-85. Easler made his major league coaching debut in Milwaukee in 1992, and his work helped the team place 2nd in A.L. batting with a .268 average.

RICH GALE PITCHING COACH

35

Gale pitched seven seasons in the big leagues, including 13 games for the Sox in 1984. In 1992, his first year coaching, the Sox finished 2nd in the A.L. in ERA (3.58)—the team's best since 1978.

AL BUMBRY FIRST BASE COACH

37

In addition to his coaching duties, the Orioles' career stolen base leader handles the pre-game conditioning program, outfield defensive fundamentals and game positioning, and baserunning instruction.

GARY ALLENSON BULLPEN COACH

The former catcher spent six full seasons playing for the Sox from 1979-1984. After managing and coaching Yankees and Red Sox minor league teams for five years, Gary returned to Boston in 1992.

The 1993 season marks the 75th anniversary of the 1918 World Series Champion Boston Red Sox. That season—shortened one month by events of World War I—and post-season served witness to some of the more peculiar events of baseball history. On the following pages, discover what the Sox, and life, were like in the extraordinary year of 1918.

The United States was at war in 1918, and the Red Sox lost 19 players to military service, including player-manager Jack Barry and top pitchers Herb Pennock and Eagle Shore. Minor leaguers helped to replenish the team's ranks.

21

1992 MEMORABILIA Leading the league in ERA (2.41)

and shutouts (5) for the third straight year, Clemens twice took A.L. Pitcher of the Month honors (May and August), and had three 10-K games with a high of 12 K in Cleveland on April 12.

Roger finished third in the Cy Young Award voting.

1918

Owner Harry Frazee's savvy deals can be credited with delivering the pennant to Boston. In February he purchased pitcher Joe Bush, catcher Wally Schang, and outfielder James Strunk from the Philadelphia Athletics for $50,000, and each player starred for the Sox during the season.

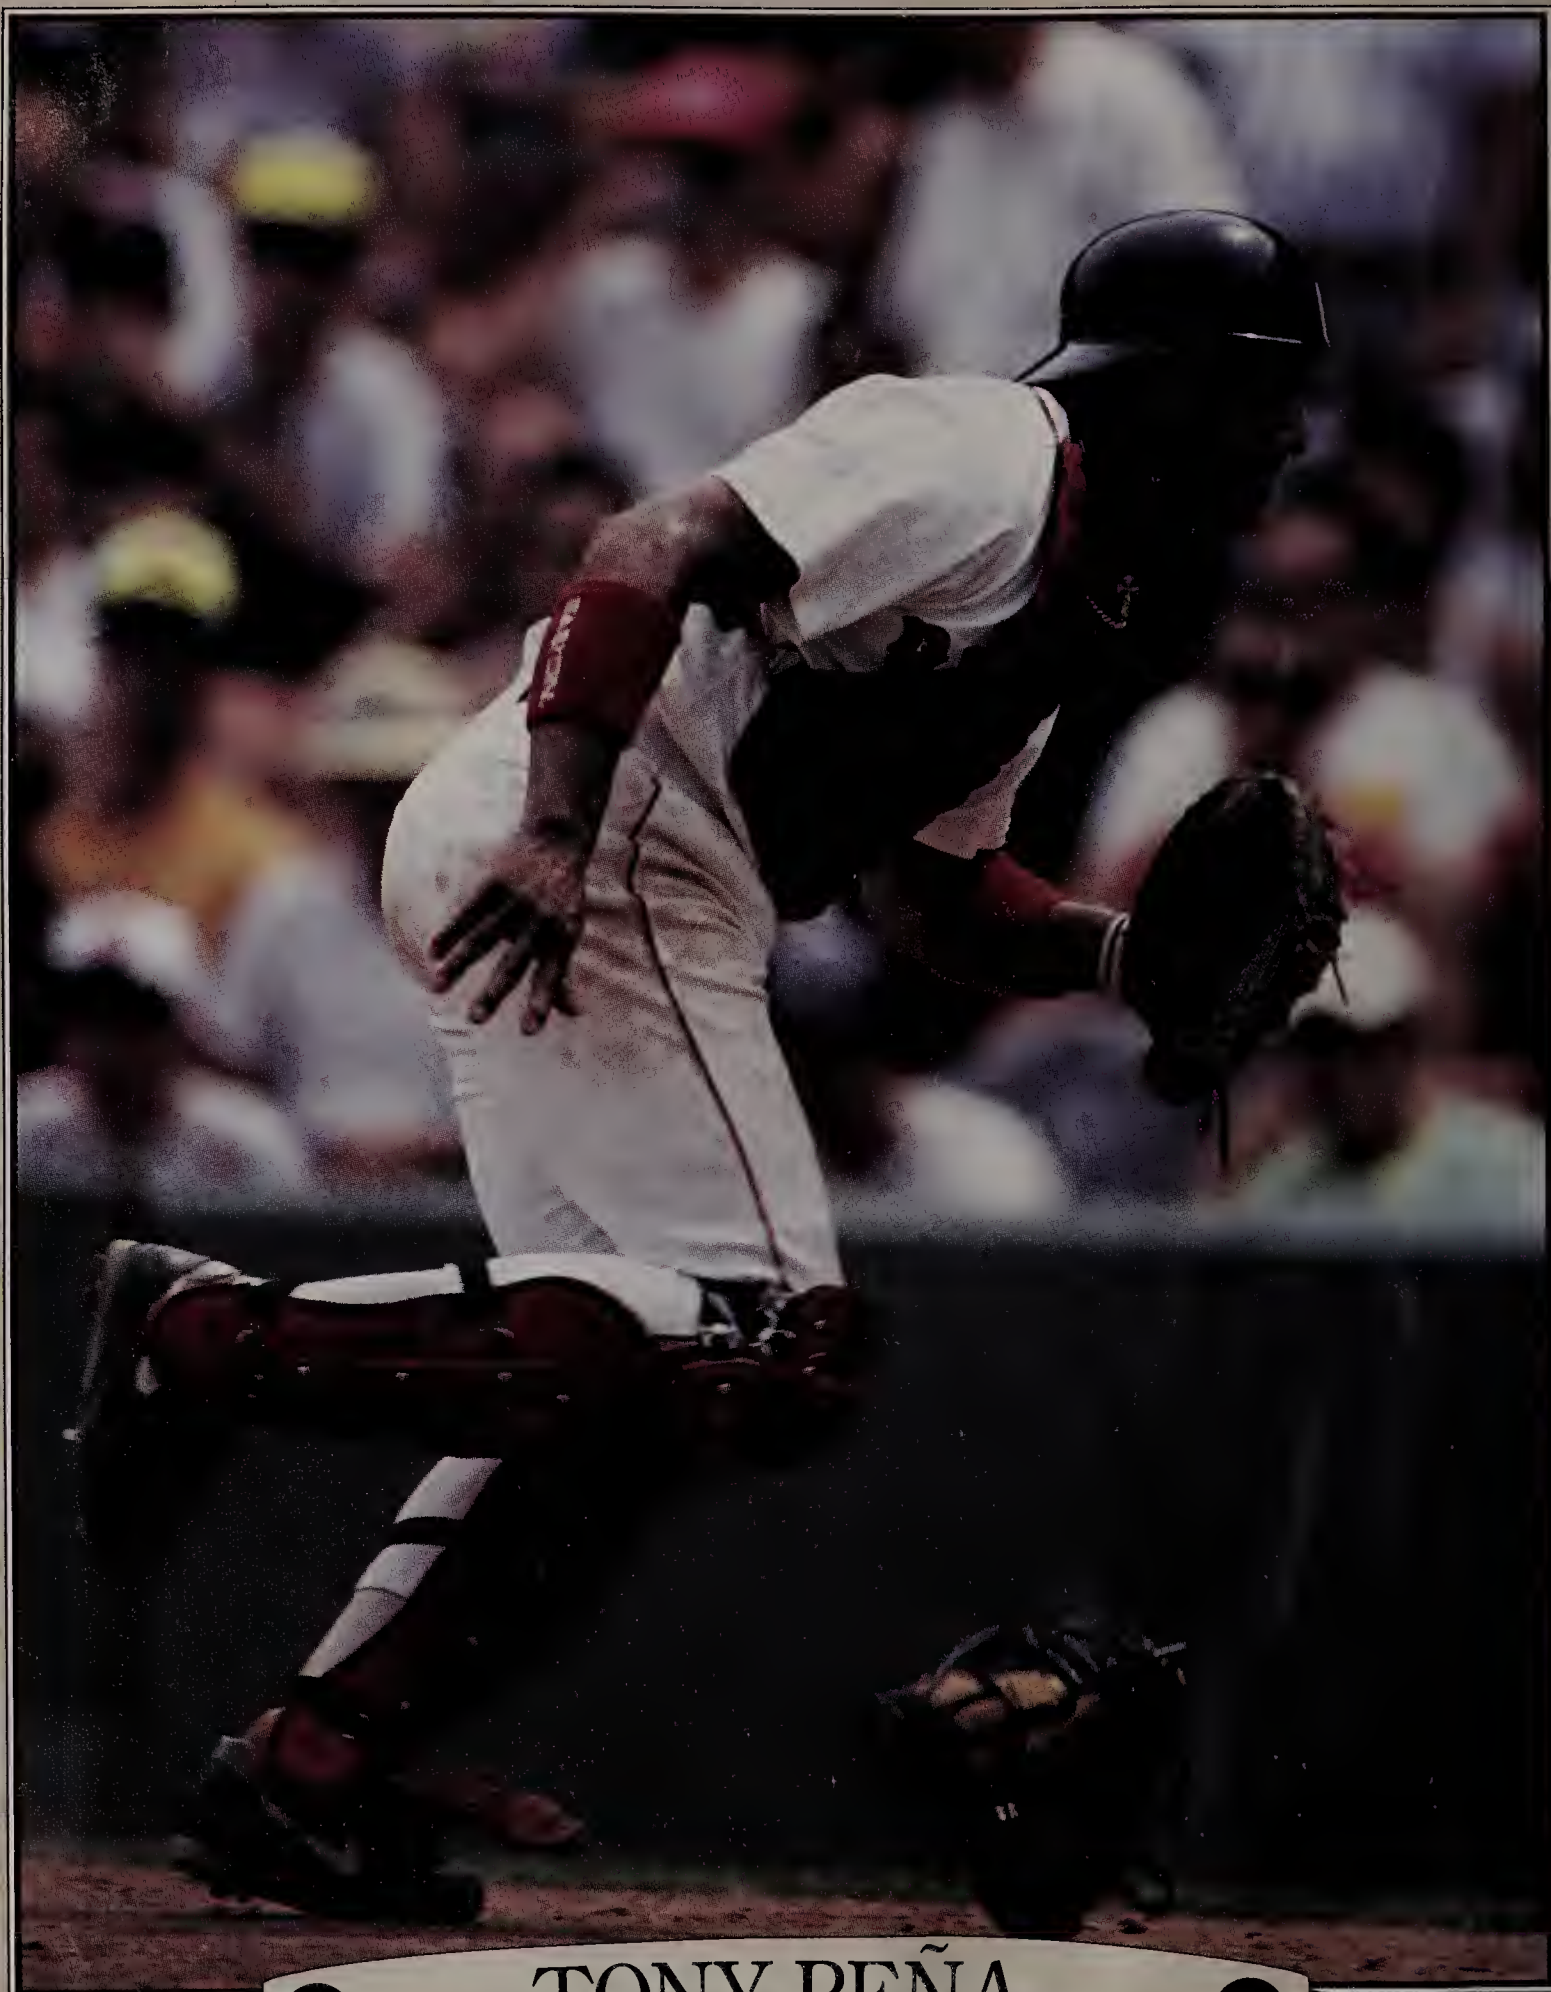

OF

1992 MEMORABILIA Dawson, with 51 extra base hits, became only the third Major League player to record at least 45 per season over 16 years (Hank Aaron and Stan Musial are the others). His single off the Mets' Joe Vitko on September 21 made Andre the 69th player with 2,500 big league hits.

The Red Sox line-up for most of the season featured Stuffy McInnis at first, Dave Shean at second, Everett Scott at short, Fred Thomas and seven others at third, Wally Schang and Sam Agnew behind the plate, Ames Strunk in center, Harry Hooper in right and George Whiteman in left.

1992 MEMORABILIA Peña's worth to the Red Sox was illustrated by the team's record of 63-59 when he started and 10-30 when he did not. Offensively, Tony was at his best with the bases loaded (.545, 10 RBI in 12 plate appearances), and was successful in 13 of 14 sacrifice bunt attempts, third in the league.

The Sox pitching staff, featuring Carl Mays, Sad Sam Jones, Bullet Joe Bush, Babe Ruth and Dutch Leonard, collectively pitched all but 79 innings of the season.

Babe Ruth first appeared as a position player in a major league game on May 8, playing first base and batting sixth against the Yankees at the Polo Grounds in New York. He smacked a home run.

OF MIKE GREENWELL 39

1992 MEMORABILIA In a season limited to 49 games due to injuries, Greenwell managed an 8-game hitting streak (.364) from May 20-29. Mike hit safely in 14 of 15 games (.323) from May 20-June 6 before his season ended on June 21.

23

1992 MEMORABILIA Calderon spent much of the year on the Montreal Expos' disabled list and underwent arthroscopic surgery on his left shoulder June 24. Upon his return from rehab in September, Ivan batted .309 over the final month and hit safely in 9 of his first 12 starts.

1918

After announcing that he didn't want to pitch any more, Ruth agreed to split his time between the mound and the outfield starting in July. He finished the season winning 13 games, playing 72 games in the field, hitting an even .300 and clubbing 11 home runs.

The American League pennant race was close, as the Sox, Yankees, Indians and Senators battled for first place. Boston never fell further than second place for more than 24 hours on their way to a 75-51 record, 2.5 games ahead of Cleveland.

1992 MEMORABILIA Darwin's 124 strikeouts were his best since fanning 129 in 1988. Pitching against the Angels on August 30 in California, Danny tossed nine innings of one-hit, nine-strikeout ball to win the 10-inning contest, 4-2.

Warfare travel restrictions demanded that the first three games be played in Chicago, the remainder in Boston. Due to the war, public interest in the Series was low. Despite tickets being priced at regular season rates, not a single game was sold out.

SCOTT COOPER

34

1992 MEMORABILIA Cooper had a career-high five hits and three doubles in a 10-inning, 4-2 Sox win August 30 against the California Angels, including a three-run double in the 10th.

In his first full major league season, Scott had 22 multi-hit showings, including four 3-hit games.

The Red Sox
In Boston, And Nothing Beats

OF

28

1992 MEMORABILIA Zupcic's first two 1992 homers

came at Fenway—and both were grand slams! His first, on June 30 with the Sox trailing Detroit 5-4 and one out in the 9th, sailed into the screen to win the game. His second, on July 10 vs. Chicago with the Sox down 2-1 in the eighth, put the Sox up 5-2.

In the Series' six games, Chicago scored 10 runs, the Red Sox only 3. It was the last Series played without a home run.

During the seventh inning stretch of Game One, a 1-0 Red Sox victory hurled by Babe Ruth, a baseball tradition was born. For the first time at a baseball game, "The Star Spangled Banner" was played. When the crowd spontaneously sang along, Sox owner Harry Frazee decided to open each game in Boston with the tune.

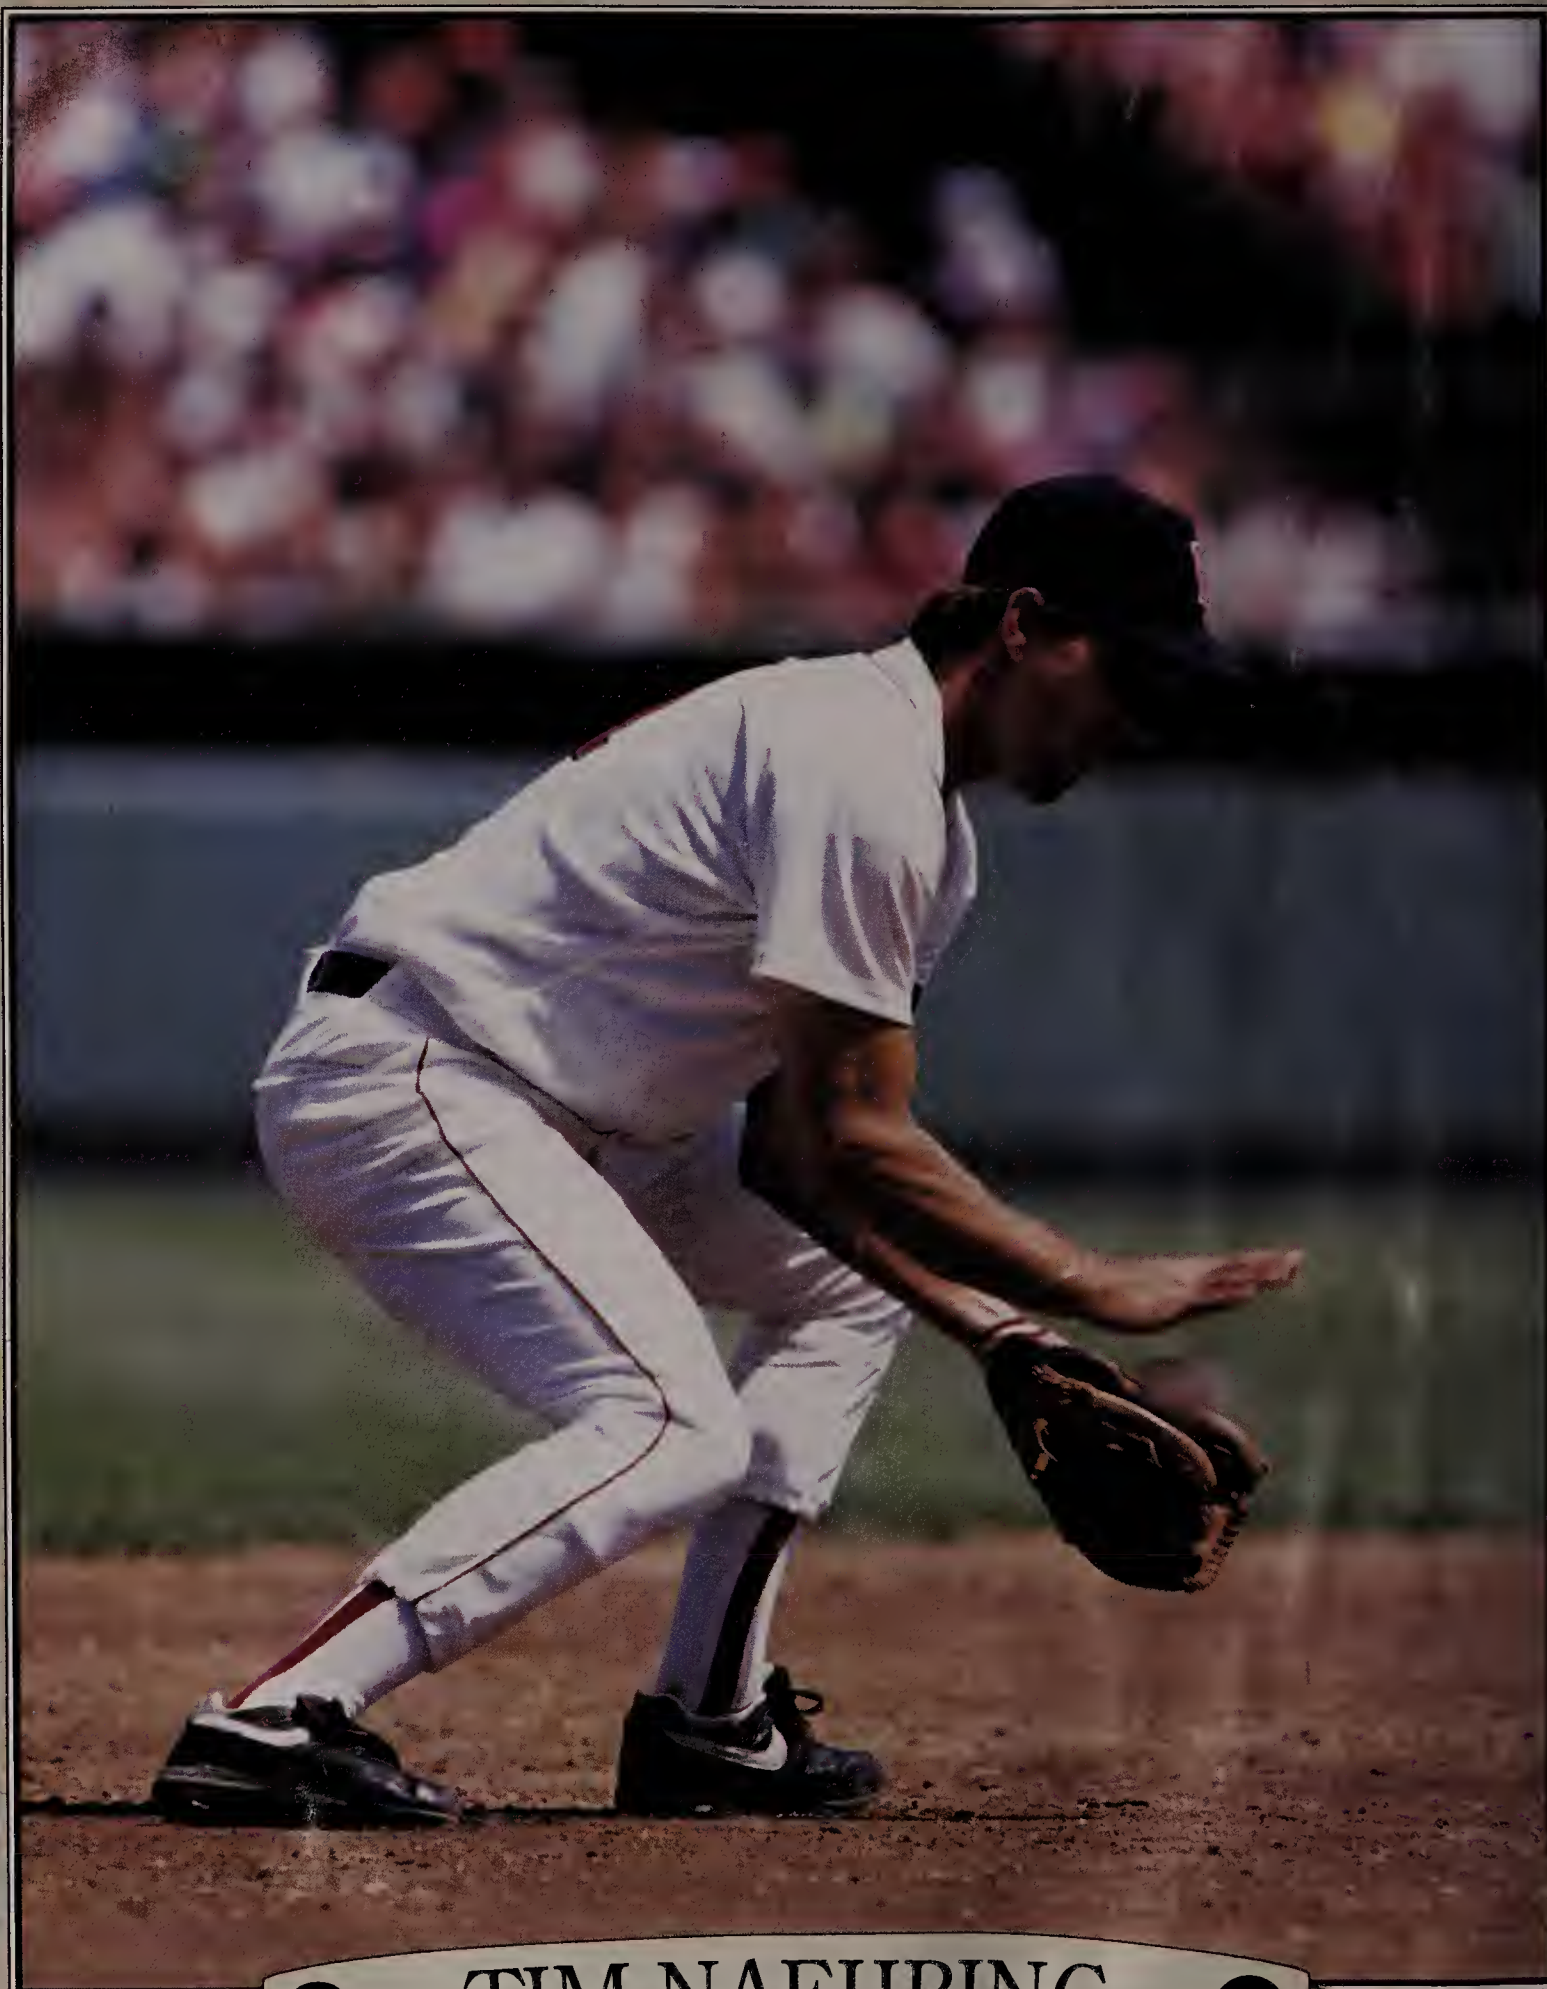

1B

MO VAUGHN

42

1992 MEMORABILIA Vaughn knocked round-trippers in his first two games of the season, April 7 in New York and April 11 in Cleveland. Mo homered in consecutive games again vs. Toronto at Fenway August 4 and 5.

Babe Ruth stretched his consecutive scoreless inning streak to 29 2/3 innings before a walk and a wild pitch led to two Cubs runs in Game 4. Ruth had badly sprained a finger on his left hand while scuffling with fellow players on the train trip from Chicago to Boston.

2B

TIM LINCUM

11

1992 MEMORABILIA Lincecum's early season was highlighted by a game-winning, 2-run homer in the top of the 19th inning April 11 in Cleveland. After a mid-season stint on the disabled list and rehab in Pawtucket, Tim started 18 of the Sox' final 28 games and hit .354 in that span.

SS

1992 MEMORABILIA Making his major league debut on the night he was recalled, July 27 vs. Texas, Valentin had an 8th-inning, RBI single off Terry Matthews for his first major league hit. John's first homer was a 6th-inning grand slam August 22, and each of his five home runs either tied the score or put the Sox ahead.

Upset with their share of Series gate receipts, Sox and Cubs players decided to strike after Game 4. The next game was delayed two hours as player representatives met with American League president Ban Johnson, who convinced them to play for the sake of the wounded soldiers in the stands.

Only 15,238 fans were in attendance at Fenway Park on September 11 as the Sox defeated the Cubs 2-1 to win the Series four games to two. Cubs right fielder Max Flack dropped George Whitteman's sinking line drive in the fourth, allowing the only two Boston runs to score.

27

1992 MEMORABILIA Harris' 70 appearances ranked 5th in the league, and were the most by a Sox righty since Dick Radatz' club-record 79 in 1964. Greg had stellar months in April and May, with ERAs of 1.84 and 0.98.

Sox hurler Carl Mays wrapped up the World Championship with a complete game 3-hitter in Game 6. Also the victor in Game 3, Mays allowed only one run in 18 Series innings.

P

55

1992 MEMORABILIA Hesketh's most dramatic win of the season came September 27, in an emergency start in Baltimore.

Filling in for Roger Clemens, who was injured during warmups, Joe pitched 8 innings of 4-hit, 1-run ball in an 8-1 victory.

Apart from two pitching appearances in Game One and Game Four, Ruth did not appear in the Series for Boston until the eighth inning of Game Six. He replaced left fielder George Whiteman, who injured his shoulder making a spectacular somersault catch.

1992 MEMORABILIA Rivera shone in the clutch throughout the course of the season. Of his 29 RBI, 13 either tied the score or put the Sox ahead, while 16 RBI came with two outs.

George Whiteman's catch of a line drive in the eighth inning of Game Six saved the day for the Red Sox and was considered the greatest in Series history at the time. The hometown crowd gave him a three minute ovation as he left the field.

1B CARLOS QUINTANA 18

1992 MEMORABILIA The Q suffered a broken right foot and broken left arm in a February, 1992 car accident near his home in Venezuela. The injuries kept him out of action for the season, but after a year of rehabilitation Carlos will be back at first.

1992 MEMORABILIA After brief 1991 action following major surgery on his right elbow in August 1990, Dopson began the 1992 season on rehab at Pawtucket and rejoined the Sox' starting rotation in mid-May. John posted Fenway marks of 5-5, 2.69, the best home ERA among Sox starters.

Whiteman, 36 years old, was the star of the Series, leading the Sox in hits and runs scored while making several spectacular catches. He never played another game in the major leagues.

Immediately after the conclusion of Game Six, a carrier pigeon was dispatched from Fenway Park to Fort Devens to give the soldiers there news of the Boston victory.

22

1992 MEMORABILIA On July 10, in his second game with the Sox after being traded from Cincinnati, Hatcher drilled a 2-out, RBI single in the 9th for a 6-5 win. Billy stole home against Toronto at Fenway on August 3rd, the first Sox steal of home in over four years.

25

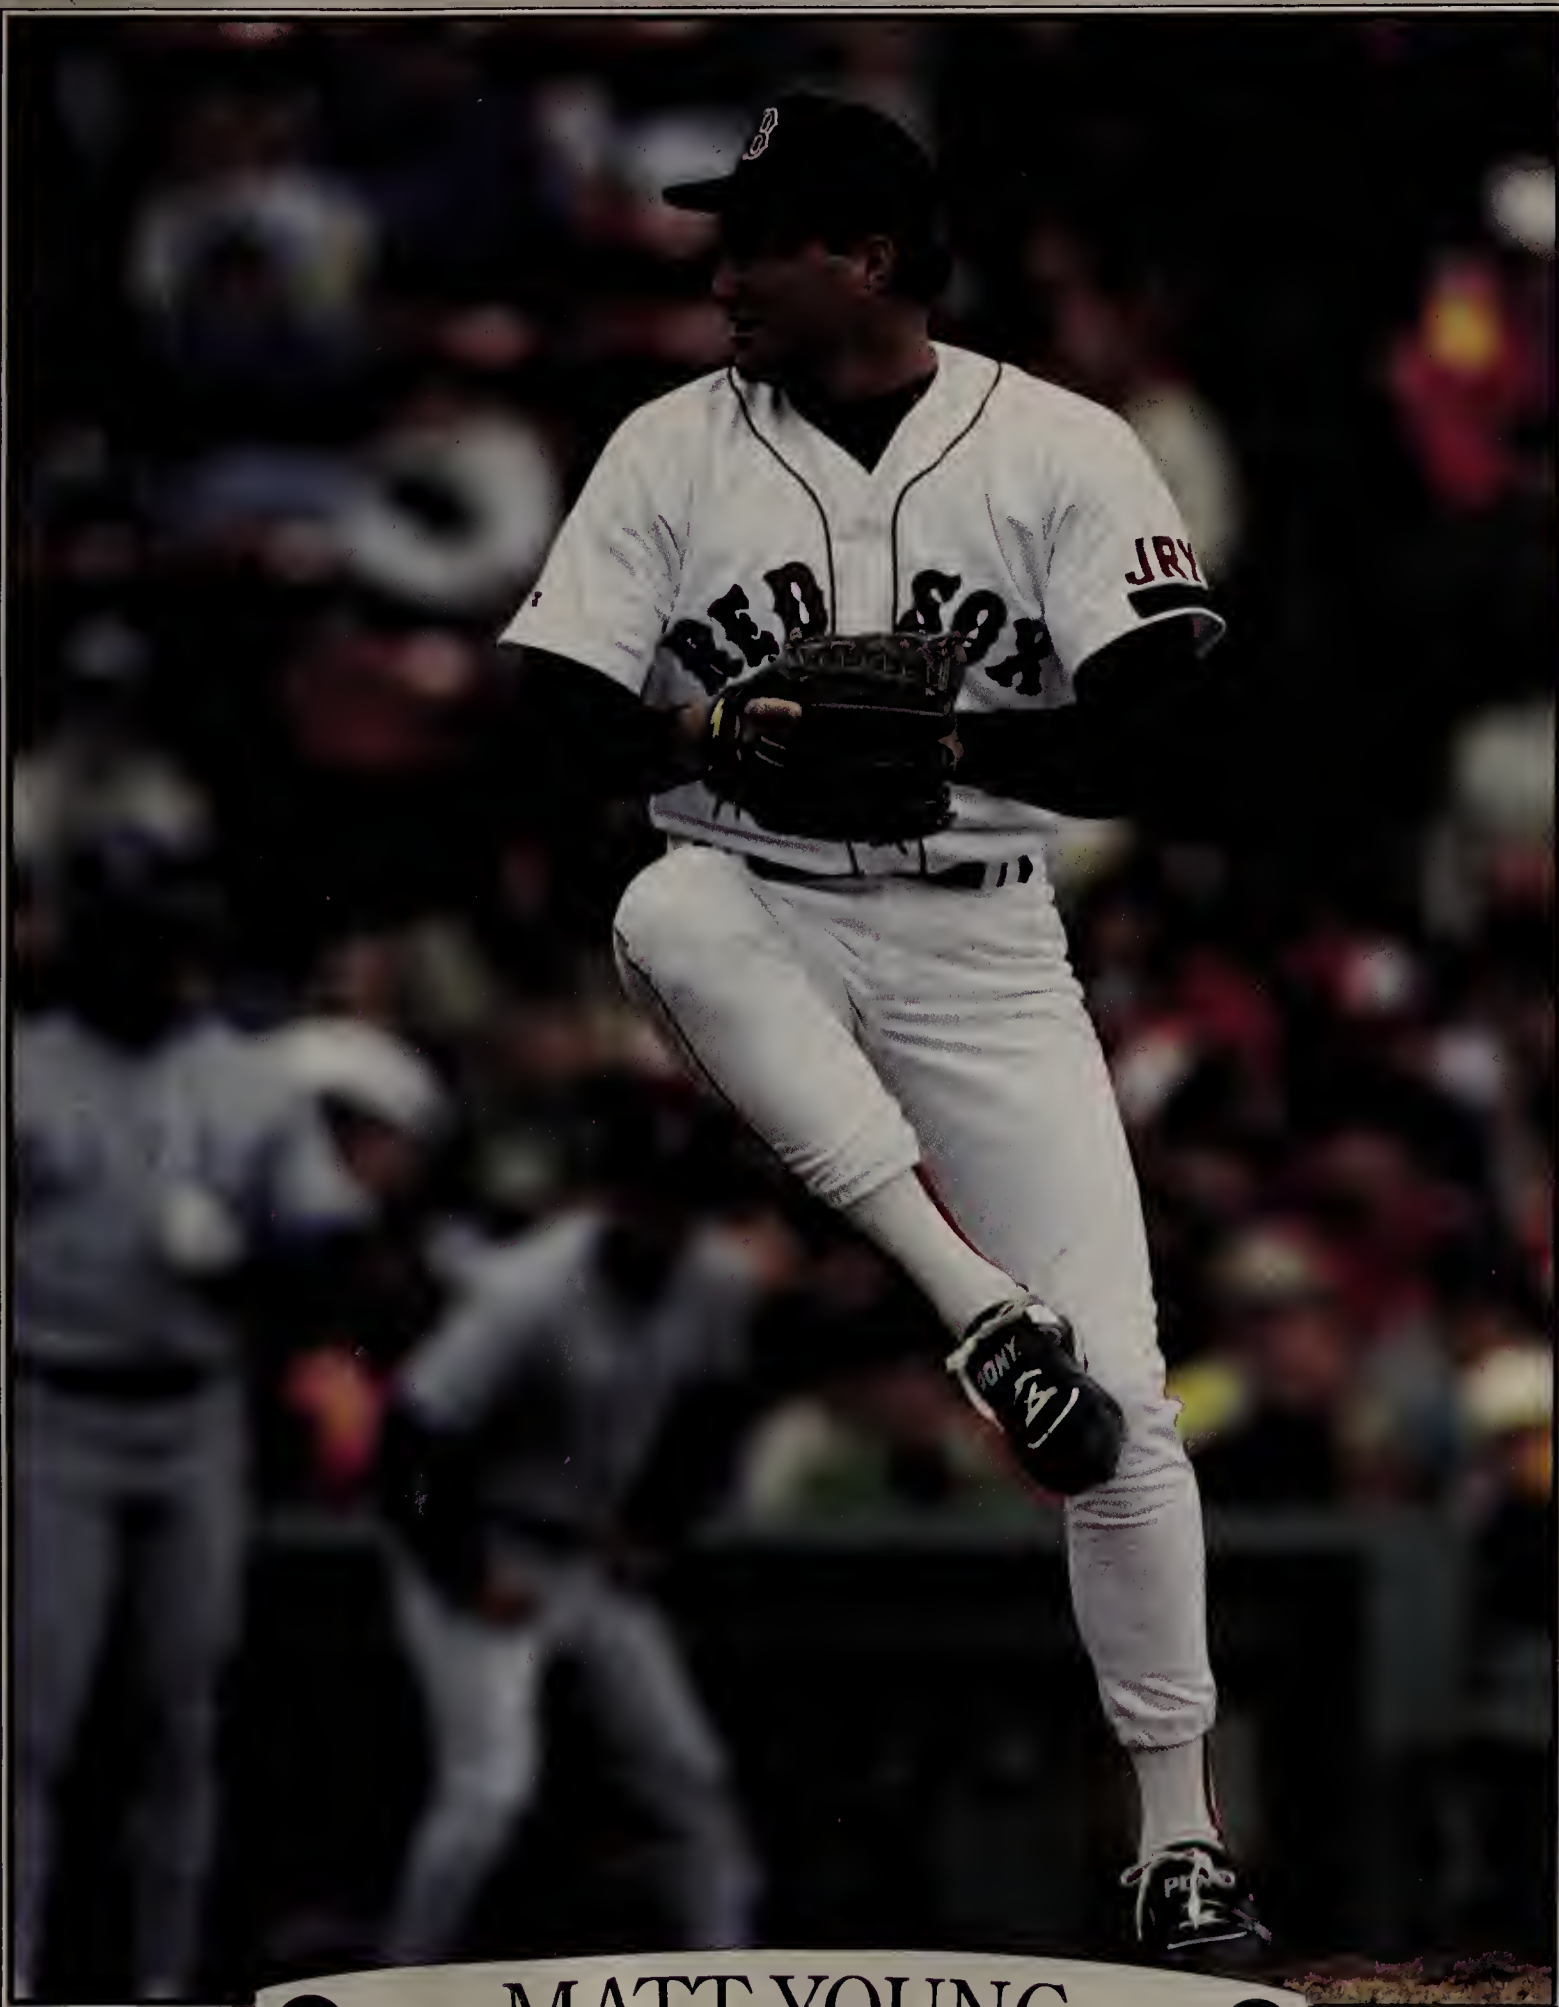

1992 MEMORABILIA The Red Sox' new closer pitched for both Texas and Oakland last season, compiling 30 saves in all. That total, good for a sixth place tie in the league, marked the second consecutive season and the third in his career in which Jeff has saved at least 30 games.

As a punitive action for the threatened strike, Baseball's National Commission never awarded the Red Sox players their championship emblems, the 1918 equivalent of a World Series ring.

The winning Red Sox players received $1,102.51 per man for winning the Series, the smallest winning share in history. The losing Cubs received $871.89 each.

30

1992 MEMORABILIA Young tossed a complete-game no-hitter in Cleveland on April 12—and lost! In eight innings, Matt struck out six but walked seven in the tough 2-1 contest.

10 Perfect

◆ BY GEORGE WHITNEY ◆

Baseball talk often turns to the subject of pitching perfection.

When discussed in Boston after the turn of the century, talk centered on that first decade's best: they called him Cyclone, or Cy for short.

By the end of his reign, followers of the Olde Towne Team turned their affections to the accomplishments of a youngster named Smokey Joe and then, in the teens, to those of one called the Babe.

In the '30s, despite mediocre teams, loyal locals could still gloat whenever the crafty veteran known as Lefty ascended Fenway's mound. And pre- and post-World War II cheers would resonate up and down Back Bay for two hurlers with the decidedly non-Brahmin names of Tex and Mel.

During the '60s and '70s, Red Sox pitching aficionados were going manic for Monbo, ga-ga for Gentleman Jim, and loco for El Tiante.

Nine big-time pitchers with nine intriguing monikers.

And then there were 10. They call this one Rocket Man.

Could it be a decade? Could it possibly be that long since a raw-boned young Texan first took the mound at Fenway Park and threw fastballs with a velocity and precision that had never, ever been seen in these parts before?

It's true. Thirty-year-old Roger Clemens, a.k.a the Rocket Man, is now the Red Sox' senior player in years of service. What's more, he is the senior member on the roster of the 10 all-time Red Sox starting pitchers (see profiles). Roger's 10 seasons in Boston rank as more years than Cy Young, Smokey Joe Wood, Babe Ruth, Lefty Grove, Tex Hughson, Bill Monbouquette, Gentleman Jim Lonborg, or Luis Tiant spent with the club, and just as many as Mel Parnell. And he's now either surpassed or is in sight of most of this illustrious staff's individual club records.

When Clemens first appeared on the Fenway scene, franchise pitching prowess was at a low ebb. The perennial cliché: the Sox were an all-hit/no-pitch outfit.

Perfect

During the late '70s, the awesome offense of stars such as Dwight Evans, Jim Rice and Fred Lynn had indeed eclipsed the under-appreciated accomplishments of starting pitchers such as Mike Torrez, Dennis Eckersley and Bob Stanley. In the early '80s, the gap between pitching and power had widened. The homers kept coming, but a dearth of front-line hurlers plummeted Sox pitching fortunes into an ERA netherworld.

Until 1984.

That was the year four upstarts—all aged 25-26—began to congeal as the nucleus of a formidable rotation. Bruce Hurst, Bob Ojeda, Dennis Boyd and Al Nipper each posted double-digit win totals. Yet, something was missing. This was a stacked deck, but one in need of an ace.

On May 11, 21-year-old rookie Clemens was summoned from Pawtucket to fill out the rotation. By August 31, when his season was shut down by an injury, he had won nine games and a Pitcher of the

◆ 1901 CY YOUNG 1908 ◆

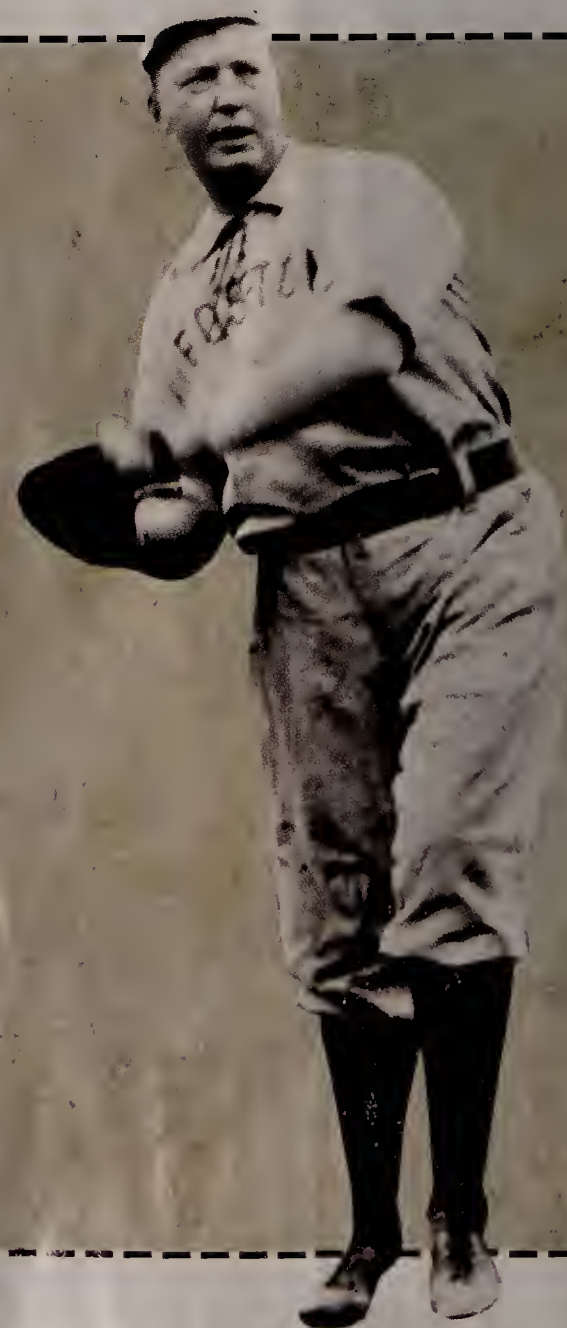

In March 1901 Charles Somers, founder of Boston's brand-new American League franchise, then known as the Pilgrims, faced stiff competition from the crosstown National League Beaneaters for the hearts of Boston's baseball fans. Somers got his headline attraction by purchasing, from the St. Louis Nationals, Denton True "Cyclone" Young.

Young had pitched well over 300 innings in every season since his rookie 1890 campaign, and had failed to win 20 or more games only twice. He was the biggest box office pitcher in the game.

Cy compiled a 33-10 record with a miniscule 1.62 ERA in his Boston debut, followed in 1902 by a 32-11, 2.15 record. In 1903, he went 28-9, 2.08 and beat Pittsburgh twice in the first ever World Series. In 1904, at the age of 37, Young pitched a still-standing record 25.1 consecutive hitless innings, a streak which included a perfect game on May 5.

In 23 years (eight in Boston) on the mound, Young won 511 games, more than any other pitcher in history. He still holds the club record for wins, complete games, innings pitched, shutouts and starts. In 1936 he was one of the first five players elected to the Hall of Fame. Twenty years later, his name was given to baseball's most prestigious pitching award.

Month performance for August when he went 4-0 with a 2.89 ERA and 52 Ks in 44 innings. After blowing away 15 Kansas City Royals (with no walks) on August 21, the American League knew a winning hand was being dealt to the Sox.

"Everybody thought that Roger had a pretty good arm," recalls Bill Fischer, who became the pitching coach in 1985, the year following Clemens' debut as a non-roster invitee to spring training. "But nobody predicted he'd be what he is today."

Everyone could be forgiven. What eye was penetrating enough, what scouting report insightful enough to measure the fire in Clemens' heart or the instinct in his gut?

"A lot of guys are just throwers early in their careers," notes current Sox pitching coach Rich Gale, who was Clemens' teammate in '84. "But Roger was already a pitcher when he came out of college. And he was already a pitcher who could also throw extremely well—that's the key. He had this tremendous physical talent but he also had a real idea of how to pitch."

The following season, that "pretty good arm" developed a problem. Throughout early to mid-1985, Clemens was troubled by shoulder soreness. But until he was finally unable to make a scheduled start in mid-August he had—as would become typical throughout his big league career—pitched through

◆ 1908 SMOKEY JOE WOOD 1915 ◆

Joe Wood made his professional pitching debut in 1906 impersonating a woman on a barnstorming team known as the "Bloomer Girls." Boston bought the phenom from Kansas City of the American Association late in the 1908 season. A pure power pitcher—"I had a terrific fastball with a hop on it," he recounted decades later—Wood steadily improved until 1912, when he won 34 games (an all-time club record), losing only five to accompany a 1.91 ERA.

During one stretch that season, he won 16 straight. The 14th in the string, a 1-0 defeat of Walter Johnson at Fenway September 6, is one of the most celebrated games of all time. Before the match-up, a reporter asked Johnson if he was faster than Wood. "Can I throw harder than Joe Wood?" replied the man who held the major league lifetime strikeout record until Nolan Ryan edged him. "Listen, my friend, there's no man alive who can throw harder than Smokey Joe Wood." Wood went on to beat the New York Giants three times in the 1912 Series to lead the Sox to their second World Championship.

Wood flashed across the baseball sky like a meteorite. Six months after the 1912 Series, at spring training in Hot Springs, Arkansas, he slipped while fielding a bunt on wet grass and broke his right thumb. The injury somehow led to damage in his shoulder and he lost the steam off his fastball. Still, he won 15 games for the Sox' 1915 World Champs, leading the league with a 1.49 ERA, before finishing his career with seven years of outfield play for Cleveland.

the pain. This time, he would go under the knife. It was a traumatic experience for the youngster as he contemplated the possibility that his career might be over.

Others in baseball may have underestimated him before, and some have since, but it was perhaps the only occasion on which a despondent Clemens underestimated himself.

On August 30, Dr. James Andrews performed arthroscopic surgery on Clemens' rotator cuff and prescribed a strict rehabilitation program. The pitcher tackled the challenge as if he were to soon be matched against Cy Young himself in a Game 7 duel. Supplementing Andrews' recommendations with his own battery of exercises and grueling running routines designed to keep the rest of his body in shape, Clemens fought his way back.

By the time spring training of 1986 had arrived, he was prepared for anything—even the eventuality that his best fastball may be gone forever. A forkball was added to his repertoire, as well as a four-seam heater—one that made his smoke rise. Any lingering doubts about a successful rehab were dispelled as Clemens struck out nine Detroit Tigers in seven innings in his last spring start. Roger was ready.

"That injury was my initiation fee into the major leagues," he says now. "It taught me how to work."

Anyone who wishes to fully understand Roger Clemens should read that last quote again: Realize, before anything else, that Roger Clemens was made—self-made—not born.

Other pitchers have been blessed with outstanding physical gifts, but few have maximized them the way Clemens has. Intense conditioning is a daily devotion during the off-season as well as between starts. At home in Houston, days from October through January are filled with weightlifting, martial arts and those trademark running regimens. Arriving annually at spring training in optimized condition, Roger adheres

◆ 1914 BABE RUTH 1919 ◆

As a baseball hitting legend, George Herman Ruth needs no introduction. Yet while many realize the Babe began his career as a pitcher, few realize his impact on that position.

Sox owner Joe Lannin bought the 19 year-old southpaw, pitcher Ernie Shore and catcher Ben Egan from the Baltimore Orioles of the International League for $8,000 in July of 1914. Ruth paid immediate dividends as he won 18 in 1915 and 23 in 1916 (a year in which his 1.75 ERA led the league) to help lead a vaunted Boston staff to back-to-back World Series Championships. After going 24-13, 2.01 in 1917, Ruth contributed 13 wins to the 1918 World Champs despite transitioning mid-season to a full-time player. Eighteen of his 19 starts were complete games, while his 11 home runs led the majors.

In the 1916 and 1918 World Series, he was a combined 3-0 with a 0.87 ERA. His record of 29.2 Series shutout innings stood until the early '60s. Needless to say, Ruth's record batting as a pitcher is the best in baseball history: in 490 at bats, he hit .304 with 15 homers and 73 RBI.

"He could fire the ball as hard as anyone," said Ernie Shore in the '60s. "If he hadn't got to the Hall of Fame with his bat, he would have made it by his pitching. You can be sure of that."

to a solitary, self-imposed maintenance program for the next eight months.

"I think the thing I most admire about Clemens is his work ethic," states Jim Lonborg. "There are many athletes who are very gifted. Roger is not only gifted, but he has tremendous discipline. That will take him a level above."

Baseball people refer to it as a player's "make-up." But to Clemens, being the complete pitching machine transcends countless wind sprints and hours of work on the weight machines. The mental game of baseball is embraced with equal ardor.

"I don't understand some of the young guys today," he offers, sounding like a throwback to another era of the game. "You'd think they'd want to soak up as much knowledge from us veterans as they could. I remember when Tom Seaver played with us, I'd talk to him in the clubhouse all the time. He'd been down the road I wanted to go. When he talked, I was like a sponge."

Clemens opened the 1986 campaign—the year Seaver spent with the Sox—with 14 straight victories. He finished 24-4, including an April 29 win in a game for the ages over the Seattle Mariners in which he struck out a major league record 20 batters (again, no walks). Even that performance took uncommon moxie.

"Actually, I had a brutal headache before that game," Clemens remembers. "I didn't think I'd make it through the first inning."

◆ 1934 LEFTY GROVE 1941 ◆

Robert Moses Grove, at age 33, was the dominant pitcher in baseball when new Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey purchased his contract from the Philadelphia Athletics in December 1932. For the slugging A's he had won 20 or more games in each of the previous seven seasons, and had led the league in ERA in four of the previous five years.

Grove possessed two major assets. First, no one could touch his fastball, not even Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Bob Meusel, whom in 1928 Grove struck out on nine pitches—twice! No other pitcher ever did it even once.

In his first season with the Sox, Grove came down with an arm injury and lost his heater. But Lefty had his second asset to fall back on: a tremendous competitive drive, which he applied to manufacture an astounding comeback. In the 1934-35 off-season Grove taught himself how to throw a curve, which helped him return to win 20 and lead the league with a 2.70 ERA. Grove went on to capture ERA titles an additional three times for the Red Sox. His last Sox win was his career 300th, in 1941. Grove was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1947.

By the time the ninth rolled around, however, it was the Mariners who were having migraines. Clemens' dugout mates, led by good buddy Hurst, were chanting, "one, two, three, blast off" in rhythm to his pitching motion; that, in fact, is how the Rocket Man's nickname was launched.

The Sox went on to the World Series, where Clemens started twice but received no decisions. A clean sweep of the season's spoils followed as he became the first pitcher in history to be named MVP of the All Star Game, Cy Young Award winner, and league MVP in the same year.

The list of career achievements has continued to astonish (see charts on pages 59, 62): Top six finishes in the Cy Young Award voting a half-dozen times, winning three; winning on three occasions 20 or more games; American League champ in ERA four times, in strikeouts twice, and in shutouts five times. And so on.

Then there are the individual moments which stand out crystal clear in the memories of Red Sox fans.

There is the 1986 All-Star Game in which Clemens, as the starter, hurled three perfect innings on only 25 pitches, 21 for strikes. The final game of the 1987 season when Roger, needing the victory for back-to-back 20-win seasons, threw a 2-hit, 12-strikeout shutout in the rain to beat the Milwaukee Brewers, 4-0. The 16-strikeout, complete-game victory over the Kansas City Royals on July 15, 1988, manager Joe Morgan's first game at the helm, to launch what would be known as Morgan's Magic. Clemens' triumphant return from shoulder woes on September 29, 1990 during a tight pennant race to shut down the rival Toronto Blue Jays for six innings on four hits—a game which the Sox won, 7-5.

What drives the man now, a decade into his career?

Perhaps the area of the Clemens psyche most difficult to quantify is his capacity for myopic concentration. It is said that had Clemens been scheduled to pitch in San Francisco the day of the 1989 earthquake, he might not have noticed.

TEX HUGHSON

1946-

Cecil Hughson was the first pitching ace to be signed by the Red Sox out of the University of Texas. A hard-throwing righty with no curve whatsoever, Tex had outstanding control. "Not to pop off," he said last winter from his home in San Marcos, Texas, "but I could throw with the top five pitchers in the game as far as speed was concerned. But I was primarily a control pitcher, I could throw strikes."

Hughson led the A.L. in wins (22) and strikeouts (113) in 1942, becoming the only Red Sox strikeout champion between Cy Young (1901) and Jim Lonborg (1967). In 1944, he won 18 games with a 2.26 ERA, the lowest Red Sox starter ERA mark between Bullet Joe Bush's 2.11 (1918) and Luis Tiant's 1.91 (1972).

Hughson's top season was 1946 when, coming back after a year in the Army, he paced the Sox to the pennant with a 20-11, 2.75 ERA record. As the staff stopper in '46, Tex consistently halted Sox losing streaks with clutch wins while getting little run support. On September 13, 1946 he clinched the pennant by beating Cleveland 1-0 on Ted Williams' inside-the-park home run.

In 1947, Hughson developed pitching arm circulation problems which deteriorated into a couple of bouts of elbow surgery, and he closed out his Sox career in 1949.

Clemens' face tightens and his eyes focus like rivets in a steel girder when discussing the ability to vanquish virtually any distraction the moment his toe meets the rubber.

"When I'm between the white lines, I'd knock my brother down if I had to," he says non-hyperbolically. "If I get my lunch when I pitch, I don't want to feel it's because I cheated myself. I do my running; I do my lifting; I do my mental preparation. If a batter beats me physically, then I'll beat him mentally. If he beats me mentally, I'll beat him emotionally. I do whatever it takes to win that day—I just don't want a bad performance to be caused by anything external."

As for team dedication, current Sox manager Butch Hobson cites an extraordinary example from 1992:

After dislocating a finger in the season opener in New York, Clemens was sent home to Boston for medical attention and was expected to stay put until Fenway's opening game. Three days later in Cleveland the Sox were battling the Indians in an interminable

◆ 1947 MEL PARNELL 1956 ◆

Mel Parnell, the Red Sox' winningest lefty of all time, came up to the club from Louisville in 1947. Mel was neither a flamethrower nor a control artist, but rather a junkballer who mixed his medium speed fast ball with a curve, a sinker and a slider, his best pitch. His slider broke preternaturally hard because the ring finger on his left hand had been broken by a pitch in the minors and healed crooked. Or so it was reported in the press. Actually, the reports were a scam planted by Boston writers with Parnell's connivance. "Aww, that was just a psychology thing to use on the hitters," Parnell admits 46 years later.

The combination of talent and psychology worked. Parnell won 25 games (a club record for southpaws) in 1949, led the league with a 2.77 ERA and started the All-Star game. He won 18 in both 1950 and '51 and in 1953 notched a 21-8 mark. Then in 1954, Maury McDermott, a former Sox pitcher who had been Parnell's roommate from 1948 through 1953 when he was traded to Washington, hit Parnell with a pitch and shattered his left elbow. Parnell attempted a comeback, but he was never really the same. An exception was July 14, 1956 when, at the age of 34, Parnell threw a no-hitter against the White Sox at Fenway Park. Shortly thereafter, he tore a muscle in his left elbow and his playing days were over.

extra-inning contest. Hobson, who had just called erstwhile starter Mike Gardiner in from the bullpen, started pondering who he had left to toss the second game of the following day's double-header. About this time, the clubhouse phone rang. It was Roger, calling from Boston to volunteer for the assignment.

Cleveland? In April? Volunteer? Who else would willingly ante up for this duty?

"That tells you right there just what sort of a team man and competitor Roger is," states Hobson. "Some people don't realize that quality about him."

The Rocket flew into Cleveland the next morning and threw a vintage Clemens two-hit, 12-strikeout shutout that afternoon.

Underlying the team dedication is an old-fashioned commitment to his fans: "Families from Maine or Rhode Island look at our game schedule to figure out when I'm pitching. If they drive all that way and I let them down, well, I just can't live with that."

All the accomplishments beg the question: What does the future hold for the man Sox general manager Lou Gorman unapologetically calls "one of the outstanding pitchers in the game, maybe in the history of the game?"

Cooperstown is one seemingly obvious answer.

Clemens' statistics bear a striking similarity to those of recent inductees Jim Palmer and Tom Seaver through their first nine seasons:

	W-L	CG	SH	SO	ERA
Palmer	129-69	98	26	1177	2.72
Seaver	168-96	148	34	2099	2.46
Clemens	152-77	89	34	1873	2.80

"Roger is probably the only pitcher in baseball with a chance to win 30 games," reasons Fischer. "He could win the Cy Young another eight times!"

No pitcher who has won a "mere" three Cy Young Awards is not in the Hall of Fame. But Clemens has grown beyond the point of being impressed by his own statistics and honors.

BILL MONBOUQUETTE

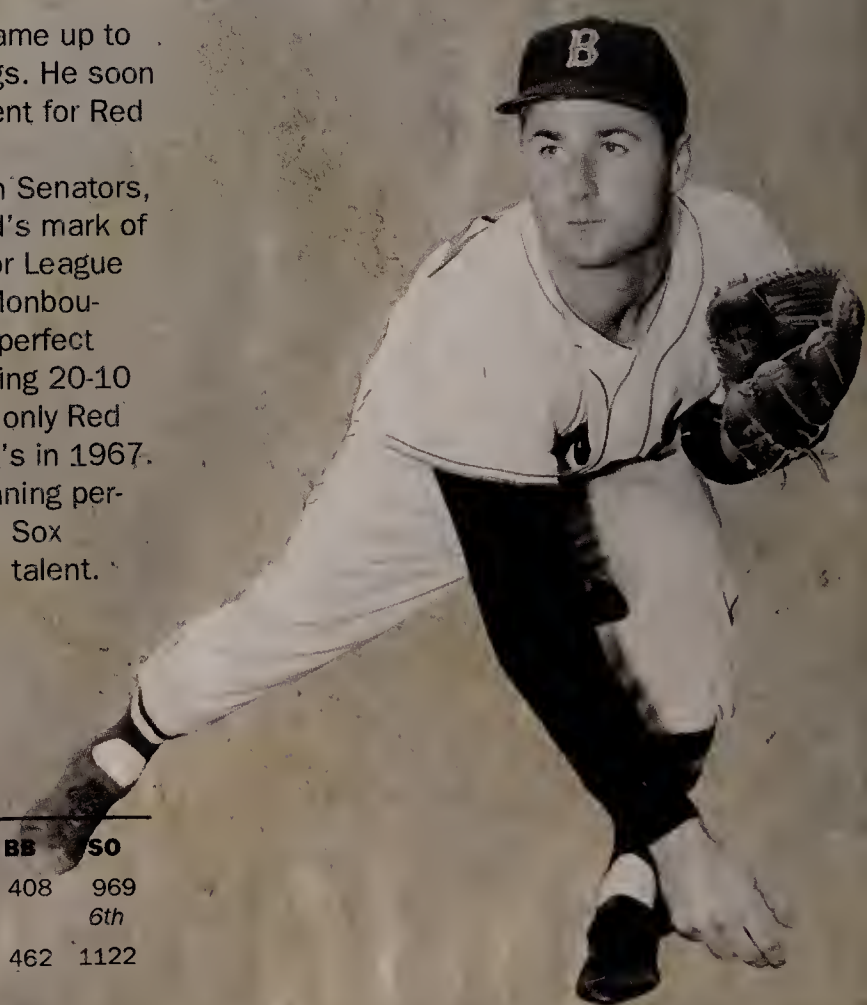

1965 ◆

Bill Monbouquette, a righthander from Medford, Massachusetts, came up to Fenway in 1958 just as the club was heading south in the standings. He soon began posting winning records in double digits: quite an achievement for Red Sox hurlers of that period.

A hard thrower, on May 12, 1961 Monbo fanned 17 Washington Senators, a Sox single-game strikeout record that bettered Smokey Joe Wood's mark of 15 set in 1911 and lasted until Roger Clemens shattered the Major League record with 20 Ks in 1986. On August 1 of the following season, Monbouquette threw a no-hitter against the White Sox, narrowly missing a perfect game by one second-inning walk. In 1963 he had his best year, going 20-10 for a Sox team that finished in seventh, 28 games back. It was the only Red Sox 20-win season between Mel Parnell's in 1954 and Jim Lonborg's in 1967.

An often overlooked measure of a pitcher's true value is his winning percentage compared to that of the team. During Monbo's career, the Sox played .458 ball. His personal mark of .513 illustrates the hurler's talent. Monbouquette was traded to Detroit after the '65 season.

"Those things are helping me get one or two steps closer to the Hall," he acknowledges, "but they aren't helping me at all towards a World Championship."

A World Series ring is his singular goal these days, even to the point of hinting at retirement if and when he gets to don one. Clemens claims he doesn't want to stay in the game as long as his friend Nolan Ryan, who will retire after this season at age 46.

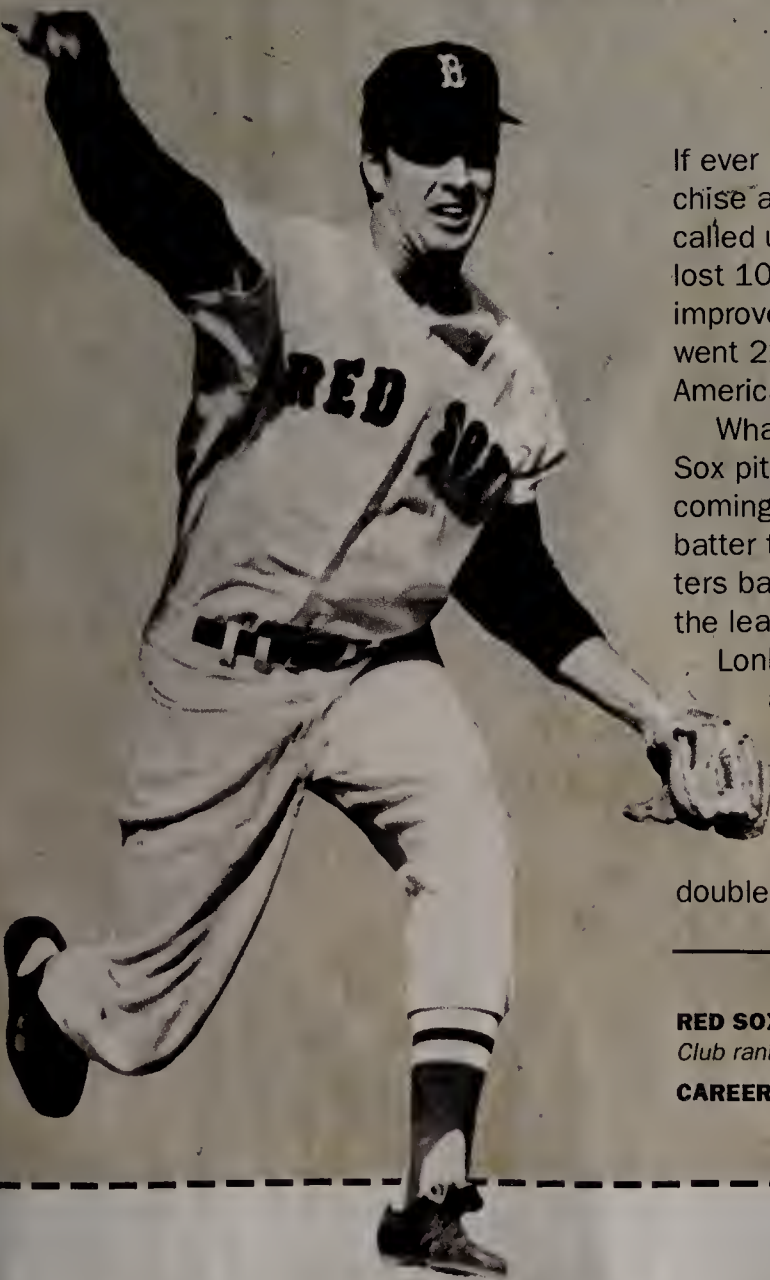

He sorely misses the family time with his sons, Koby and Kory, the days stolen from him by baseball's laborious schedule. The boys are school age now and, laments Dad, "We won't be able to take them around the cities with me like we used to. And that's going to be extremely tough."

"When you leave home to go on a road trip, it's hard to see your five-year-old holding back tears because he doesn't know when his daddy's coming back. I tell him I'll only be gone three weeks. He thinks three weeks is a year; at that age he doesn't know the difference."

"Looking at all that," he concludes, "the year 2000 is kinda when I'd like to wind down my career."

At the millennium, Clemens will be a ripe old 38. But Bill Fischer seems skeptical about the deadline. "The more games he wins, the longer he's going to

◆ 1965 JIM LONBORG 1971 ◆

If ever a single pitcher's season could be said to have turned a whole franchise around, it was Jim Lonborg's 1967 campaign. The tall righty had been called up to the Sox in 1965 at the age of 25, and went 9-17 as his team lost 100 games for the first time since 1932. The following year, Lonborg improved to 10-10 and the Sox lost "only" 90 games. Then, in 1967, Lonborg went 22-9 with a 3.16 ERA and the Impossible Dream materialized into an American League pennant.

What accounted for Lonborg's uncanny improvement? Legend has it that Sox pitching coach, Sal "The Barber" Maglie, taught Gentleman Jim the art of coming inside on hitters in 1967. He learned his lesson well. As Lonborg's hit batter total soared, so did his strikeouts. Expecting chin music, enemy batters bailed out as Lonborg's fastball nipped the black. His 246 strikeouts led the league.

Lonborg shut down the Minnesota Twins on the final day of the season, a victory which determined the pennant. He went on to win two World Series games against the Cardinals, including a one-hit masterpiece in Game 2.

A skiing accident in the winter of 1967-68 wrecked Lonborg's knee and curtailed his budding Sox career. He rebounded to win in double digits six more times, all but one of those with other teams.

pitch. I know them guys. When they get old, they get greedy. They want to win as many games as they can."

"There's a lot of ifs, ands, and buts," admits Clemens. "If I get close to retirement day and it looks like I'm close to 300 wins...or the team is close to a World Championship...and I can be the third, fourth or fifth starter...I'd like to hang out a couple more years, maybe until that new phenom we've been waiting on shows up."

Roger's contract was recently extended by the Red Sox through the 1996 season. But if he's waiting for another one like himself to come down the pike, he'd better sign a long, long-term extension. "Those guys," says Fischer, "come around once in a lifetime."

Yes, it has been that long—the 10th Roger Clemens season is here. For fans who admire pitching perfection, the only thing better than looking back to relish the memories is, perhaps, to anticipate the possibility of yet another decade of performance from the Rocket Man.

◆ 1971 LUIS TIAN 1978 ◆

Luis Clemente Tiant began his career with Cleveland where, in 1968, he won 21 games while leading the league with a microscopic 1.60 ERA. The next season, the Cuban-born righty suffered arm troubles, and his winning days seemed over. In 1971 the Sox decided to give him a shot, and he suffered through a 1-7 record. But in 1972, he rewarded the club's confidence by winning 15 games and leading the league again with a 1.91 ERA. He went on to win 20 or more games for the Sox in '73, '74, and '76.

On the mound he was a sight to behold: half whirling dervish and half ballet prima donna, throwing an apparently limitless variety of pitches at every possible speed from all points of the compass. For eight years Tiant bewildered batters with his repertoire and for eight years Fenway Park echoed to the roar of "Looo-eee! Looo-eee!"

After winning 18 games during the regular season, Tiant set the tone for an ALCS sweep by pitching a complete-game victory in Game One vs. Oakland. He started the World Series off in similar fashion, shutting out the Cincinnati Reds in Game One at Fenway. In Game 4, Luis demonstrated his true grit by tossing 163 pitches, mystifying the Reds. He returned six days later as the starter in the legendary Game 6, lasting seven innings.

Tiant went on to pitch for three additional teams before retiring.

VOICES OF THE SOX

WRKO

The WRKO booth welcomes new voice Jerry Trupiano, who joins 11-year veteran Joe Castiglione.

Castiglione, a native of Hamden, Connecticut, began his major league broadcasting career in 1979 in Cleveland, and did TV play-by-play for the Brewers and Indians before coming to the Red Sox in 1983.

Jerry Trupiano and Joe Castiglione

Trupiano spent two years calling play for the Houston Astros and the Montreal Expos. In addition, he's been heard on CBS Radio baseball broadcasts. Jerry's resume also boasts a long list of play-by-play assignments, including the Houston Oilers and Houston Rockets and Southwest Conference football and basketball.

TV-38

Sean McDonough pairs up with Bob Montgomery for a sixth year calling games for Channel 38.

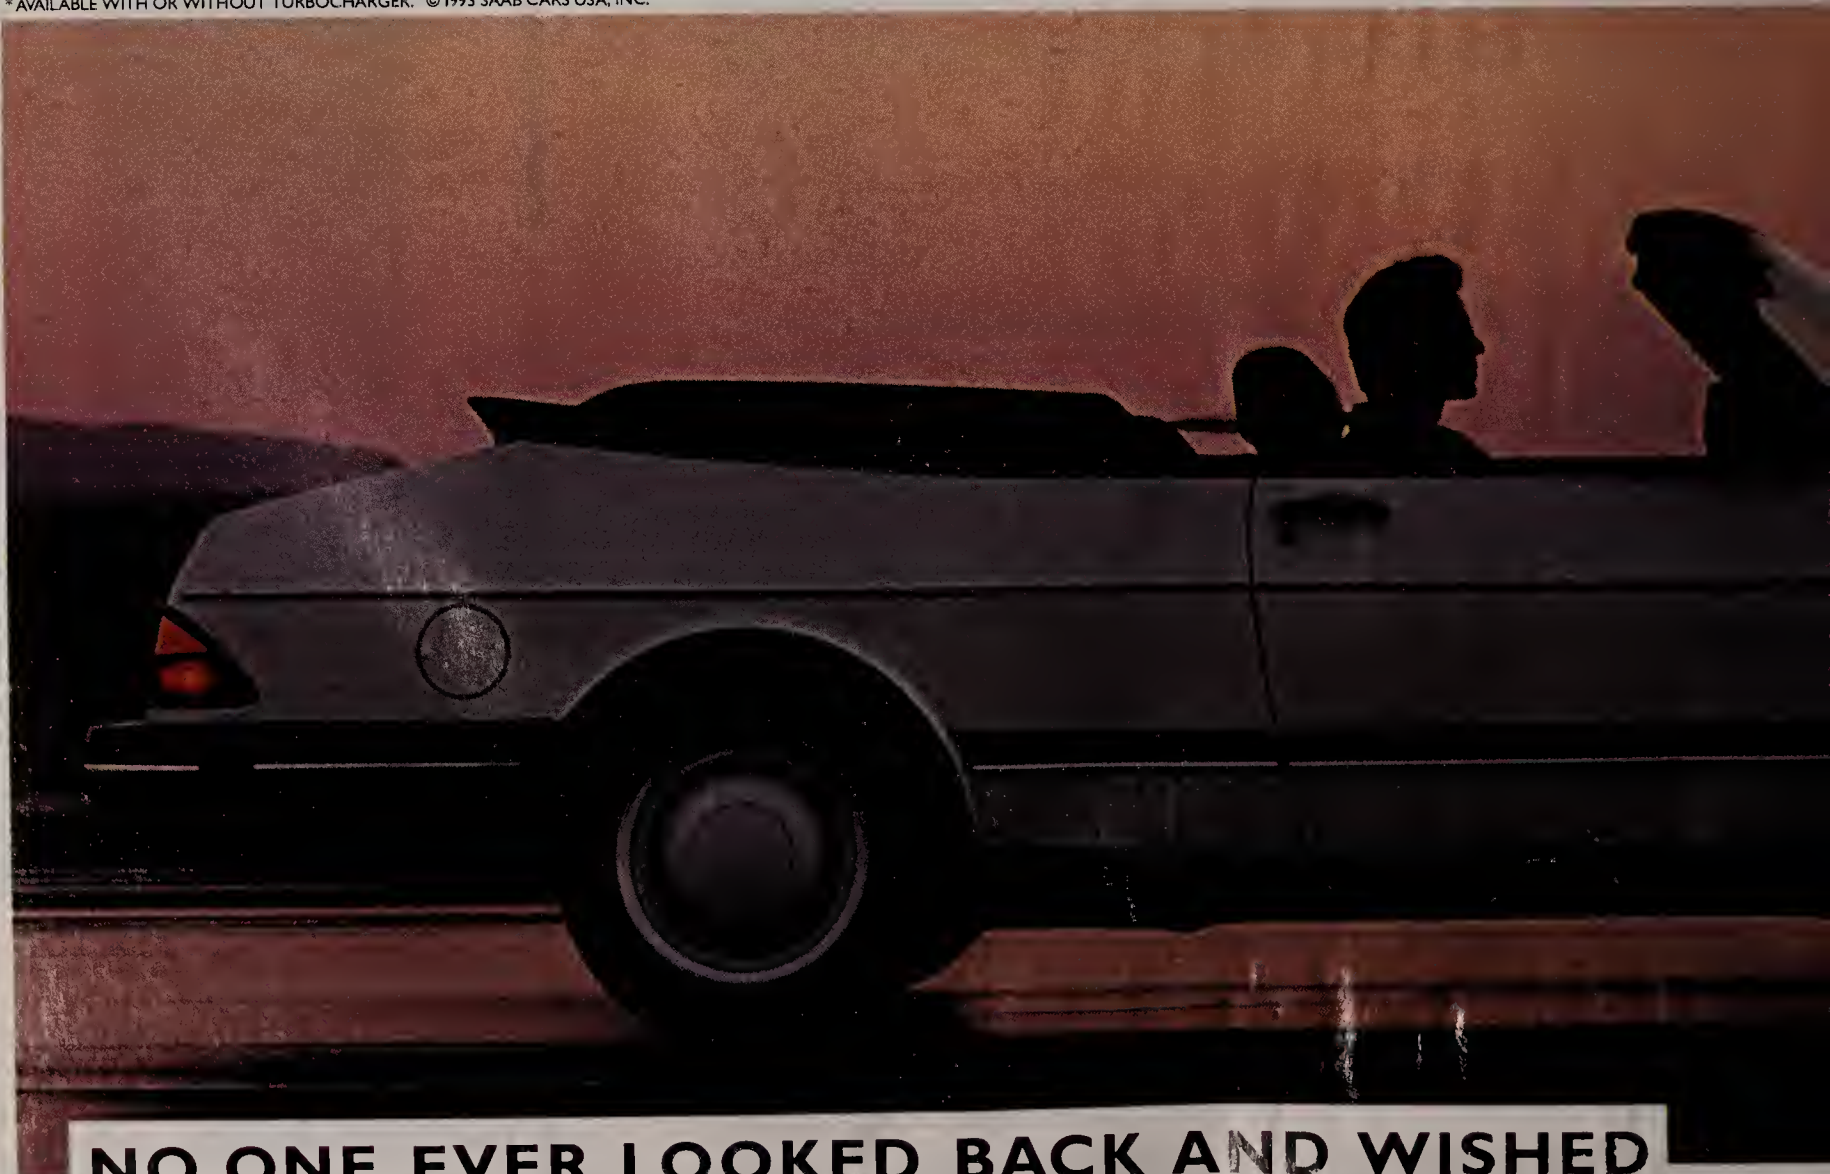

Montgomery's Red Sox ties stretch back to 1962, when he joined the organization as a catcher. In 1970 Bob made it to the big leagues, where he played for a decade.

McDonough came to TV-38 in 1988, and that same year won a regional Emmy for his play-by-play coverage of Sox telecasts. The Hingham, MA native has earned national respect for his clear, accurate and often witty assessments of events on the field. In 1992, CBS named Sean the number one play-by-play announcer for major league baseball coverage.

NESN

NESN's Red Sox broadcast team sports a new look this season as Bob Kurtz moves into the broadcast booth to handle play-by-play duties. Kurtz spent eight years doing play-by-play for the Minnesota Twins and North Stars. Bob has also announced for the Detroit Tigers and St. Louis Cardinals. He joins former Red Sox second baseman Jerry Remy, who returns as color commentator.

Steve Burton moves into the studio to host Red Sox Digest and Red Sox Instant Replay, while Amy Stone takes over as Red Sox feature reporter. Tom Larson returns as post-game reporter.

CARTER RADIO NETWORK

The Red Sox are pleased to be broadcasting to Spanish-speaking Red Sox fans once again this year on WROL-AM. For the first time, all Red Sox home games will be aired. WROL-AM Boston is the flagship of the Carter Radio Network's five stations (including Hartford, Lawrence, Providence and Springfield), which have been broadcasting Red Sox games in Spanish since 1990.

Life is filled with cars chosen on behalf of kids, mortgages and any number of other selfless priorities. But just once, shouldn't you buy a car for you?

A test drive in a Saab 900 Convertible might help you decide. A product of the same performance heritage as its hardtopped siblings, the 900 Convertible offers a spirited 16-valve engine,* rally-refined handling and an appetite for hard driving rare among open cars.

And since it is a Saab, it also offers such practical considerations as ABS brakes, a driver's-side air bag and Scandinavian-sized seating for four.

So if you've reached your lifetime quota for self-denial, see your Saab dealer for a 900 Convertible test drive, or call 1-800-582-SAAB for more information.
